ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Wiltshire Record Society acknowledges the permission of the Bishop of Salisbury to publish these documents from the diocesan archives. Due thanks are also made to Steve Hobbs and John d'Arcy of the Wiltshire and Swindon Record Office for their help and encouragement, and for making the documents available for copying and research. The help of John Chandler must also be acknowledged in the production of this volume. His advice and expertise have been unparalleled, and without his assistance, in so many fields, the volume would still be struggling to the surface. The help given by Michael Gray and his colleagues in The Merchant's House Trust, Marlborough, is also gratefully acknowledged, as is the Marc Fitch Fund. Many other people have been involved in the attempt to identify all the archaic terms used in these inventories and I am most grateful to them all – curators of museums and secretaries of the livery companies alike.

The extraction and transcription of the 454 probate inventories of Marlborough were the brainchild of the late Iris Lorelei Williams, whose interest in them formed the basis of her MA dissertation. Having obtained a grant from the Marc Fitch Fund to cover the cost of photocopying all the inventories and some of the wills, Lorelei then spent many, many hours, firstly transcribing each document with great care and accuracy, and secondly, compiling the huge glossary which forms such an important part of this work. It was while endeavouring to find out the meanings of hundreds of archaic words, that her work was cut short by her untimely death.

IRIS LORELEI WILLIAMS 1938-2004

Continuing the work of someone who has passed on to higher things is slightly unnerving. I have often sensed Lorelei at my shoulder, tutting at my obtuseness, pointing out that a mistake is mine and not hers. She was so thorough in all she did that I feel humbled by the experience of completing this volume for her.

Lorelei and I were friends, as well as colleagues. We met as early members of the Anglo-German Family History Society, when she lived on the Isle of Wight and I lived in London. We met three or four times a year at Cookham for committee meetings and I realised very quickly what a hard-working and diligent woman she was. Towards the end of 1992, I gave up my membership of the Anglo German FHS, as I believe did Lorelei. We lost touch and it was not until my family and I were settled in Wiltshire and I was once more involved in family - and house - history that I bumped into her again. I forget the circumstances, but I suspect it was in the locker-passage at the WSRO. We always seemed to meet there and would spend a long lunch-hour discussing all things historical. By then she had moved to Devizes and our friendship was renewed.

In sifting through the many files which were handed to me after Lorelei's demise, I realised just how much she was involved in. I know that her own family history was a passion close to her heart; but she also read widely around every subject and was in correspondence with many academics on a variety of topics. Her interests covered not only Marlborough, but the wider picture of Wiltshire, parts of Hampshire and Sussex, and much on Ongar, in Essex, and its Academy, about which she had an article published. She gave presentations to various societies and her files contain the core, or at least the start, of many new topics, on which she had obviously planned to work.

For an engineer, she was an admirable historian, full of enthusiasm and good sense. People still say they can recall her voice and her laugh; they always made one smile. And with her wry sense of humour, it was not really a surprise to learn that she had elected to continue as the eternal student after her death - spending the next three years at Southampton University, to whom she had given her body for medical science.

It was through Lorelei's recommendation that I enrolled with Bath Spa University College (now Bath Spa University) to read for an MA in Local and Regional History and we often met for coffee or lunch, in Trowbridge or at the College, to discuss my progress and her own work on the Marlborough inventories. Little did I know that one day it would be my sad but honoured privilege to complete that work for her. I hope I have done her credit.

INTRODUCTION

... it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labelled to my will ... ¹

MARLBOROUGH, THE TOWN

Marlborough was first referred to as a borough in 1086, when a third of its revenues was paid to the Crown. It had originally been founded as a royal estate centred on the River Kennet and extending into the downland north and south. Being a downland settlement, its main occupation was with the farming of sheep. The siting of the settlement, on the crossing of two main thoroughfares and with the Kennet as a valuable source of both water and transport, led to its development as a town; in 1204, the burgesses were granted markets for Wednesdays and Saturdays. The oldest recorded commodity in the town was corn, in 1203; weaving and fulling are known from 1215 and leather working (tanners, skimmers, curriers, leather sellers and shoe makers) from 1378. A wooden castle was built in the town in the 11th century, to be replaced later by a stone-built structure. This increased the defences of the town and in its shadow trade prospered.

By the mid 17th century the High Street was lined with jettied houses, the homes of affluent merchants. For this reason the fire which broke out at the tannery at the west end of the town in 1653 caused extensive damage and many houses were destroyed, though more have survived than was once thought. The Merchant's House, for example, rose phoenix-like from the ashes of that fire and is now being restored to its former glory. It is from these middle years of prosperity, the 16th to the 18th centuries, that the probate inventories, the subject of this volume, were drawn.

At the beginning of the 19th century major roads were widened for coach transport and in 1812 New Road was created. Marlborough became an important staging post on the London to Bath route, with all the subsidiary services which that carried with it. The site of the old castle was used in 1688 for the building of a private house, but in time this became the Castle Inn, serving many of the stagecoaches passing through the town. In 1843, the building was incorporated into the newly opened Marlborough College, which has made the town well known both nationally and internationally.

PROBATE INVENTORIES

In the most basic terms, a probate inventory is a list of the possessions of a person who has recently died, and whose heirs have made a formal legal request to acquire those possessions. Many thousands of probate inventories have been deposited in record offices throughout England and Wales, and they are particularly useful in illustrating the lifestyles of people of lesser importance, who usually appear in the historical record only as names in a parish register or tax list, 'that sad passport to immortality', if at all.² One of the objectives of the probate inventory was to safeguard the executors from claims which the estate could not meet, since the acceptance by the probate court of the inventory value limited the liability of the executor to that amount.³ The inventory also served to prevent the beneficiaries from being defrauded by unscrupulous executors, and to enable the probate court to determine its fees, which depended on the value of the estate.⁴ Before the government took control of probate matters in 1858, these had always been dealt with by the ecclesiastical authorities.

The hierarchy of the Church of England was divided into several tiers, each with its own court, which dealt inter alia with probate and the administration of estates. Small numbers of parishes formed deaneries, but these did not normally exercise any probate jurisdiction. Deaneries were grouped into archdeaconries, whose courts granted probate of the estates of those whose property lay solely within their jurisdiction. Estates lying in more than one archdeaconry in a diocese would be dealt with by the consistory court of the bishop. When the estate lay in more than one diocese, the probate or letters of administration had to be granted by the provincial Prerogative Courts of Canterbury or York, with Canterbury exercising superior jurisdiction. The P.C.C. also dealt with the estates of those dying at sea. Many executors, particularly from the upper social classes, sought probate at the Prerogative Courts even when they were not legally obliged to do so, simply because of their prestige as the superior courts.⁵ There were, in addition, a number of peculiar jurisdictions, which were exempt from the attentions of both bishops and archbishops and had autonomy under the sovereign, though sometimes with an intermediate supervisor.⁶ Between 1649 and 1660 the church courts were suppressed and probate matters were administered by the Court of Civil Commission in London. Many people, particularly in the north and west of the country, ignored this court, and delayed probate until the church courts were reconvened at the Restoration.⁷ Richard Rumsey was buried at St. Mary's church in Marlborough on 25 December 1658, but his inventory was not taken until 14 March 1660/1 [143]. Probate was granted to his executrix, his wife Edith, on 16 April 1661. There were in all more than 600 courts dealing with probate and administration within England and Wales until 1858.

Wiltshire lies within the Diocese of Sarum and is divided into the Archdeaconry of Sarum, which covered the south of the county, and the Archdeaconry of Wiltshire covering the north. Parts of the county were, however, subject to no fewer than 26 peculiar jurisdictions. Some of these, like the peculiar of Castle Combe, covered just one parish, but many were more extensive. The Dean of Salisbury had sole jurisdiction over more than 40 parishes in Wiltshire, Berkshire and Dorset, as well as supervisory jurisdiction over many others, including such distant places as the parish of Uffculme in Devon.⁸ The two Marlborough parishes lay within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Sarum. Their probate files, together with most of the other records of the Diocese of Sarum, have been deposited in the Wiltshire and Swindon Record Office, which acts also as the Diocesan Record Office. Marlborough inventories deposited in the records of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury are not referred to in this edition, but it does include those from three files where probate was granted in error in the court of the Archdeaconry of Wiltshire. Mary Hill [359] left goods in Malmesbury, which lies in that Archdeaconry, as well as in Marlborough. In the case of Walter Jefferies [125] and Jone Jones [126], however, both of whose wills were proved on 25 October 1641, there were no such grounds for confusion. Possibly the Bishop's and the Archdeacon's Surrogates were both hearing cases in the town on the same day, and these two probates were issued unnoticed by the wrong court.

During the period covered by this survey the making of probate inventories was regulated by an Act of Parliament passed in 1529, called 'An Act concerning fines and sums of money to be taken by the ministers or Bishops and other ordinaries of Holy church for the probate of testaments'.⁹ The Act is considerably more complex than its title suggests, and deals with many considerations in the processes of probate and administration. The Act demands that the executors or administrators of every deceased person's estate should have an inventory of their goods drawn up, but it is obvious that, despite the large numbers which have survived, this was not always done. Not only are there burial records for many more deceased persons than probate files in the records of the church courts, but there are also many files which do not contain inventories. In most cases there is no way of knowing whether this is because the inventories were never made, or because they have not been preserved by the relevant ecclesiastical registries.¹⁰ The Bishop of London's Commissary Court in Essex and Hertfordshire exercised probate jurisdiction over almost all of Essex but, though the wills proved in the court have survived in their thousands, all the inventories have disappeared.¹¹ In a few cases the losses are more recent. All the probate files from large parts of Devon and Somerset which had been deposited in the Exeter Diocesan Registry were lost when the building was destroyed by fire in an air raid on Exeter in 1942.¹² Many authors give the impression that inventories were not required if the estate of the deceased was valued at less than £5. In reality there is no such exemption allowed in the Act. The only reference to low value inventories is that the fees required for probate or letters of administration shall not exceed 6*d.* to the Scribe and 6*d.* for the Commission, where the value of the estate does not exceed one hundred shillings.¹³ Such a low fee would not encourage the ecclesiastical authorities to pursue those disposing of the estates of the indigent.¹⁴ There are in fact considerable numbers of low value inventories in the Marlborough collection, though the proportion of these was reduced over time as a result of inflation. Since the richest people tended to have their probates dealt with at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, and the poorest people often avoided the probate courts altogether, it is inevitable that the records of the Archdeaconry and Diocesan Courts dealt mainly with the affairs of the 'middling sort'.

It is usually impossible to know why an estate of low value was taken to the probate court to be dealt with, but in one case it is clear, though not from the inventory itself. When John Glide [75] died in 1628 he did not leave a will, and the total value of his effects was £3 0*s.* 10*d.*, which included a 'bedsteed of bordes' valued at one shilling, and his 'wearinge apparrell' worth only eight shillings. His probate file includes a letter from Thomas Bennett, a member of one of Marlborough's leading families, to his friend Thomas Sadler, who was an official at the Consistory Court in Salisbury:

This is the poore widow I spake of unto you when I saw you last at Marlborough. She is urged to take an Administration by an unmercifull sonne in law who lyeth in good fashion and is of a good estate. The woman hath no means to lyve but is fayne to goe to service, her husband beinge a very old man, and sick so longe that they spent and sold all for their relief in his sickness but onely this small porcion; more worthe than this have many time our Almesfolk, and yet the greedy fellow hath saide he will have a share.

The letter goes on to beg Thomas Sadler to charge as small a fee as he can. Letters of Administration were granted at the Sarum court on 13 June 1628 to Mary Glide, widow, and the ‘unmercifull’ Thomas Benger, a farmer of the nearby village of Overton.

The number of surviving Marlborough inventories varies greatly over time. This is not unusual. In the dioceses of Lincoln and Canterbury, for example, there are many dating from the decades following the Act of 1529, whereas in Peterborough and Rochester there are very few before the Restoration period.¹⁵ The earliest Marlborough inventories date from the 1590s, though they are particularly numerous in the period from 1660 to the end of the seventeenth century. Many towns and cities have a similar concentration, the city of Chichester being exceptional in that its probate courts seem never to have recovered fully after the Commonwealth period. There are few probate files from the decades before 1600 in the records of the Consistory Court of the Bishop of Sarum. This is a comparatively late start: Banbury in the diocese of Oxford has 48 inventories earlier than this, while Uttoxeter (diocese of Lichfield) has 114 dating from 1531 to 1590.¹⁶ The Marlborough inventories, although much reduced in numbers after about 1720, continue in the main to be as detailed as those appraised before that date, and do not degenerate into the ‘brief summaries . . . of little historical value’ which are found in Oxfordshire.¹⁷

Clause 4 of the Act of 1529 is headed, ‘How the Inventory shall be made by the Executor or Administrator’, and sets out the qualifications of the appraisors, and the required contents of the inventory. Two appraisors at least are called for, but many Marlborough inventories from the 1590s to the 1660s were appraised by three people. It is not uncommon to find four or five appraisors in this period, and William Gunter’s inventory [104] had no fewer than six. From the last quarter of the seventeenth century, however, it became much more unusual for more than two appraisors to be involved. Only four inventories were produced by an appraisor acting alone: Arthur Deane [48], Margaret Evans [228], Susannah Hill [306] and Francis Hancock [392]. The appraisors were to be creditors or beneficiaries of the deceased, their next of kin or, failing these, ‘two other honest persons’. It is impossible to tell from the inventories if any of the appraisors were creditors or beneficiaries, and very few of the appraisors had the same surname as the deceased, as would be expected if next of kin were regularly appraising inventories in Marlborough. One exception to this is the Greenaway family. All four members whose inventories survive had others of the same surname among their appraisors. It seems likely, therefore, that the majority of the appraisors were friends and neighbours of the executors and administrators, though these were just the kinds of people who were also likely to have been debtors or creditors. Some men were appraising regularly. The name of Richard Cornwall appears on five inventories between 1593 and 1608, and Noah and Joseph Webb, who were probably cousins, signed thirteen inventories, together or separately, between 1682 and 1696. The most prolific appraisor was Bartholomew Benger, who drew up no fewer than seventeen inventories between 1661 and 1684.

There is nothing in the Act of 1529 to say how quickly after death the inventory should be produced, but since by implication it should include all the deceased person's goods and chattels at the time of death, this would become more difficult the longer after death the appraisal took place. This was particularly true of farming inventories, where the situation could change radically as crops were harvested or animals died or were sold. There is one Marlborough inventory, that of Francis Gregory [448], where his widow, acting as executrix, carefully listed and priced those goods which she had sold since her husband's death. In Derbyshire it was noted that the inventories were sometimes drawn up on the day of death, though there were other cases when they were not appraised until several weeks had passed.¹⁸ A sample of 125 inventories from several different counties, where the date of death is known, has shown that almost half were made within seven days, and nearly three-quarters within two weeks.¹⁹ In Marlborough the situation was somewhat different. There are many gaps in the burial registers, and a significant number of the inventories are undated, or have lost their dates through damage. Of the 292 inventories for which both dates are known, over half were made in the first two weeks after burial (including those drawn up between death and burial), but one third were delayed for more than one month after death. These include the inventory of Roger Davis alias Morris [162], who was buried on 7 September 1656, but whose probate was not granted until 11 May 1665, the inventory being taken one week later. Even more extreme is the case of Richard Hawkins [374], who was buried on 1 November 1682. His inventory was not taken until 13 July 1706, probate being granted on 24 July. Hawkins left the bulk of his estate to be divided between three of his daughters, but to the use of his wife during her lifetime. It may be that probate was delayed until her death.

The 'honest persons' were required by the Act to produce a 'true and perfect inventory', and there has been much debate both about the care and the honesty which the appraisors brought to their work.²⁰ The concern with which they carried out their task seems unrelated to the value of the deceased person's goods. The inventory of Thomas Whetebreade [19] totalled only £3 6s.9d., yet his appraisors carefully listed such minor items as six spoons worth 2d., a chafing dish and a skimmer worth 6d. and a chair valued at 3d. By contrast, the appraisors of George Dobson [384] listed only his 'household goods and shop goods' worth £8 5s.0d. with no other detail at all, in an inventory totalling £150 0s.6d., and in the case of Roger Blagden [210], whose inventory totalled £1,036, the appraisors merely remarked that his 'bed and other furniture' was worth £10. As there can be no independent checks on the valuations given by the appraisors, this is another area where doubts have arisen as to their skill and accuracy. Steer regarded some valuations as ‘ridiculously low’, while West’s judgement is that goods were undervalued ‘quite recklessly’.²¹ Swinburne, however, in his legal commentary, states that the goods should be valued at the sum which they ‘may be sold for at that time’, and the courts accepted that the executors would sometimes need to sell goods to finance the debts and pay the monetary bequests of a testator.²² In the case of household goods it is their second-hand value rather than their replacement cost which is implied, so that the fact that one man’s chairs were valued at 6*d.* each and another man’s at 5*s.* each reveals more about the lifestyle of the two men than about the conscientiousness of their appraisors.²³

There were in any case two independent checks on the appraisors. One was the presence of the heirs, executors and creditors of the deceased, any of whom could have complained to the ecclesiastical courts if they thought that the appraisors were not carrying out their duties correctly. In fact, disputes over the contents or value of inventories are not often to be found in the Cause papers.²⁴ Some disputes concerning inventories did arise, though these were usually concerned with allegations that the plaintiff had not received a fair share of the deceased person’s goods when the value of the estate was less than the total value of the bequests.²⁵ The inventory of Mary Gillmore [451] refers to ‘diverse goods appropriated by Joseph Gillmore, the party promoting this suit’, which the appraisors were unable to value. There was a second check on the probity of the appraisors. As Laslett has written: ‘All of our ancestors were literal Christian believers all of the time . . . their world was a Christian world and their religious activity was spontaneous, not forced on them from above.’²⁶

It is therefore unlikely that the appraisors, working under a solemn oath, would have committed deliberate fraud.²⁷ More recent work has judged that they valued a person’s goods ‘realistically’, while Machin found that, at least in his Dorset parishes, the average values of inventories in each decade followed reasonably closely upon the fluctuations in the price index.²⁸ This is not entirely true of Marlborough, where there is an apparent lag between the rises and falls in the price index and those in the median values of the probate inventories. This is not surprising. Household goods were intended to last a lifetime, and with care two or three (as seen in the bequests of such goods made to younger relatives of the testator), so the possessions of an old man could have been purchased at any time during the years when he was a householder, including years of higher or lower prices than the year in which he died.

Not all the possessions of the deceased appeared in the inventory. The Act required the appraisors to list 'all the Goods, Chattels, Wares, Merchandizes, as well moveable as not moveable whatsoever'. According to Burn's interpretation, the list of goods was to include: 'all the testator's cattle, as bulls, cows, oxen, sheep, horses, swine, and all poultry, household stuff, money, plate, jewels, corn, hay, wood severed from the ground, and such like moveables.'²⁹

Chattels personal consisted of the clothing, money and plate of the deceased, while chattels real included leases and bonds.³⁰ The most important omission from the inventories, as far as the historian is concerned, is that of freehold or copyhold land and buildings. This means that the total wealth of the deceased cannot be measured from his inventory alone. For a farmer, even his potential income from the land cannot be calculated, since the fallow, uncut hay, standing timber and fruit on the trees were all regarded as part of the freehold.³¹ Until the passage of the 'Act for the better settling of intestate estates' in 1670, which gave the courts powers to award an equitable distribution of the estate to the deceased's wife and children, a man's inventory did not include his wife's bona paraphernalia, defined as her apparel, providing it was 'agreeable to her degree', her bed and her 'jewels and ornaments for her person'.³² Despite this, the appraisors of the goods of Thomas Patie [129] included his wife's apparel and her Bible, valued at £4. Undoubtedly some goods were omitted because the appraisors thought them to be of trivial monetary value.³³ It is also possible that, where probate or administration was granted to the principal creditor, he valued only enough of the deceased's goods to cover the amount of the debt owed to him, thus making the person seem to be far poorer than they in fact were.³⁴ Anything regarded as an heirloom would not be included in the inventory, that is, an item of particular significance to the family, which was intended to remain in their ownership for posterity.³⁵ The inventory of Deborah Prior [150] was followed by a 'Scedule of what things Remyne in the howse to be left standing', which were listed but not given a value.

As for leases, the practice seems to have varied. Leases for years should have been included, though this does not always seem to have happened.³⁶ Leases for lives should have been omitted before 1676, but they were sometimes considered as leases for 99 years, and so were included.³⁷ Only a few are to be found in the Marlborough inventories, the first in 1672. Many of the leases listed in the inventories are for the remainder of the term on the house which was occupied by the deceased. Debts were another area of confusion for the appraisors. Money owing to the testator was included in many inventories, but it is often impossible to tell whether these were personal loans or trade debts, though 'shop debts' or 'book debts' are occasionally specified. Other forms of indebtedness included bonds, bills, specialities (which were sealed bonds), rents, mortgages and annuities. In reality, debts do not become assets until they have been collected, but despite this even desperate debts were included.³⁸ This term may have been used by some executors merely to indicate debts which they had not yet tried to settle, to avoid their being accused of not trying hard enough to collect them.³⁹ It is also possible, of course, that the debts truly were desperate. Even as late as the nineteenth century England did not sustain a fully cash economy. Many transactions were by barter or the exchange of labour and services, which worked very well during the lifetime of the individual. On his death, however, when the executors or administrators tried to turn these debts in kind into cash, the debtors were quite unable to honour them.⁴⁰ Debts which the deceased themselves owed are found in a few inventories, but should not have been included, since they did not belong to the estate.⁴¹ The total value of the assets listed could be considerably reduced by offsetting the debts owed by the deceased. However, there is a point of view that the amount of money a man owed was a measure of his credit-worthiness, and that his economic status could be better adjudged by adding his debts to the value of his goods rather than taking them away.⁴² Some inventories list the debts owing to and by the deceased in considerable detail, including the residence of the debtor or creditor. These can be used to determine the area over which the deceased was trading, or at least those places where there were people living of whom he had personal knowledge.⁴³

Although a good number of the appraisors showed considerable expertise, many of them were unable to sign their names, and there is nothing in the Act to demand that they should be literate. One study estimated that about 70% of men and over 80% of women were totally illiterate in the seventeenth century, in that they were unable even to write their names. This evidence, however, seems to conflict with Comenius's perception that 'bookes are growne so common in all Languages and Nations, that even common cuntry people, and women themselves are familiarly acquainted with them'.⁴⁴ Although the proportion of Marlborough appraisors signing the inventories rather than making their mark increased during the seventeenth century, even in the eighteenth there were some appraisors who were unable to sign their names. It is also noticeable that the proportion of inventories in which the appraisors' names are merely listed, and in which they neither signed nor made their mark, falls considerably after the Commonwealth period. In a Staffordshire village it was found that the proportion of testators, witnesses and appraisors able to sign rose from 9.7% in the period 1590–1611 to 49.6% during the last decade of the seventeenth century.⁴⁵ Since Marlborough had a flourishing Grammar School throughout the period it is surprising that so many men were unable even to sign their names.⁴⁶

Another measure of literacy is the proportion of individuals who owned books. In Marlborough this rose significantly in the period after the Restoration, and compares well with other areas. Two of the largest collections of books belonged, not surprisingly, to the two masters of the Grammar School whose inventories have survived, John Martin [114], who was also an ordained minister, and Abraham Power [200]. The largest library of all, however, valued at £10, belonged to Roger Blagden [210], who called himself a mercer in his will, but whose appraisors designated him a gentleman. He left all his property to his wife Elizabeth, and she appears to have kept his library intact, for when she died four years later her inventory included 'Item in her Clossett 107 bookes £10.00.00' [226]. The Bible was probably the one book which even a semi-literate appraisor could recognise, and very few other books were named.⁴⁷ William Woodes [50] had an 'old service book 1s.6d.' and Hester Clifford [454] had a Book of Common Prayer, also valued at 1s.6d. Other collections of books may well have been similar to the mixture of devotional and legal works owned by a Norfolk farmer, which included John Foxe's Book of Martyrs of 1571 and a collection of Statutes printed by William Rastell, who died in 1565.⁴⁸

Although it is even more difficult to find evidence relating to number skills in the seventeenth century, a certain amount can be deduced from the inventories concerning the spread of numeracy. The ability to perform simple mental arithmetic may have been even more widespread in the seventeenth century than literacy.⁴⁹ Anyone concerned with trade would at least have needed to be able to add and subtract with reasonable facility, and the use of tables and ready-reckoners was widespread.⁵⁰ John Aubrey declared that ‘a Barre-boy at an Alehouse will reckon better and readier than a Master of Arts in the University’.⁵¹ Aubrey appears to have been right: Dr. Busby, who was headmaster of Westminster School in the seventeenth century, was unable to add up correctly, while Samuel Pepys had to learn his multiplication tables at the age of 29 from a one-eyed ship’s mate.⁵² At the start of the period covered by the Marlborough inventories, almost all of the amounts given in them were written in Roman numerals, whereas by the end of the seventeenth century this had almost entirely been superseded by Arabic notation. The change-over occurred mainly in the period after the Restoration, rather later than in Bristol, where 90% of the inventories were written using Arabic numerals by 1650.⁵³ Given the difficulty of making arithmetical calculations using Roman figures, it is not surprising that many of the inventories in the early period had been totalled incorrectly, though the lack of competence in addition did not entirely disappear as Arabic notation took over. However, in most cases the mistakes were small.

In the inventory of William Woodes [50], even though the appraisors’ names are not given, one of them had totalled the list of values with great care. The values of the items are given in Roman numerals, but the appraisor has inserted his totals and sub-totals in Arabic notation. He started at the bottom, totalled a few lines, then put in a sub-total. Finally he added the sub-totals. Even though the four sub-totals are correct, the appraisor has still made an error in his final addition, and his grand total is £1 too low. There was only one case in which the amount of the addition showed a serious discrepancy with the actual total. Dorothy Winde [201] was a widow whose inventory is virtually identical to that of her husband Edward, who had died two years previously. The appraisors in both cases were the same three men, of whom Bartholomew Benger was almost certainly the scribe. When he copied out Edward’s inventory [187] with Dorothy’s name and the new date in the preamble he inadvertently omitted the line ‘Item In Debts Due uppon the shopp Booke l^{ij} x^s’ [£51 10s.od.], thus making the total of Dorothy’s inventory wrong by that amount.

The principal disadvantages of using probate inventories in local history have already been noted: the omission of real property and debts owing by the deceased, which make it impossible to determine a person’s true wealth, together with the omission of bona paraphernalia and other goods legally ignored by the appraisors. However, these difficulties are far outweighed by the advantages to social and economic historians of using the information which the inventories do contain about items in ordinary household use by people of middling or lower rank. The fact that the appraisors were people who could compare the values of such goods with those in their own households makes it all the more likely that the values given to the goods were reasonable. The lists of goods are often highly detailed, though in Marlborough the appraisal of shop goods was sometimes not as meticulous as is seen elsewhere.⁵⁴ The greatest importance of probate inventories, however, must be found in the enormous numbers of them which survive in repositories throughout England and Wales, making comparisons possible over different periods of time as well as between contrasting and similar (or apparently similar) communities.

EDITORIAL NOTE

The inventories are arranged chronologically and each is numbered. The number is followed by the name of the deceased; his or her trade, occupation or status; the date of the inventory, where this is known; and the WSRO reference number.

The preamble of each inventory has been omitted, as have the words Imprimis and Item, which occur frequently in the originals, but which are unnecessary repetitions in a work of this size. Where individual rooms are mentioned, these have been included, in their original spelling, using italics. All values have been given in £ s. d., and Arabic numerals have replaced the Roman variety. The total value of each inventory is given at the end of each entry; some totals have been found to be inaccurate and rectified sums have been added. The total is followed by the names of the appraisors, where these are known.

At the very end of each entry notes may be found, indicating where wills and burial registers have been used to obtain dates and even names, which could not be deduced from the inventories. Other notes may include where Roman numerals have been used, discrepancies between wills and inventories, inclusion of debts and any damage to the original document.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF INVENTORIES AND CONTEMPORARY FURNITURE

On the following pages are reproduced copies of inventories and parts of inventories, selected to illustrate the range of handwriting styles and physical conditions encountered by anyone working on this class of document. These are followed by illustrations of items of furniture and household utensils of broadly contemporary date, from the collection being assembled at The Merchant's House, Marlborough.

GLOSSARY

It is hoped that the following will provide both a glossary and an index for the Probate Inventories of Marlborough. Every attempt has been made to make this as comprehensive a list as possible, with cross-references for the many variations in spelling. Alternative spellings follow the standard spelling of a word, except where these are adjacent to the standard.

Inevitably, there are, despite rigorous searching, a few words which have not yielded their meanings. These are indicated and the WRS would be delighted to hear from any readers who can throw light on such words.

LIST OF PUBLICATIONS

The Wiltshire Record Society was founded in 1937, as the Records Branch of the Wiltshire Archaeological and Natural History Society, to promote the publication of the documentary sources for the history of Wiltshire. The annual subscription is £15 for private and institutional members. In return, a member receives a volume each year. Prospective members should apply to the Hon. Secretary, c/o Wiltshire and Swindon History Centre, Cocklebury Road, Chippenham SN15 3QN. Many more members are needed.

The following volumes have been published. Price to members £15, and to non-members £20, postage extra. Most volumes up to 51 are still available from the Wiltshire and Swindon History Centre, Cocklebury Road, Chippenham SN15 3QN. Volumes 52-9 are available from Hobnob Press, PO Box 1838, East Knoyle, Salisbury SP3 6FA.
