PREFACE

When the Society published Mr. Sandell's edition of Abstracts of Wiltshire Inclosure Awards and Agreements in 1971 it seemed desirable that the information contained therein should be supplemented from similar digests of Wiltshire Tithe Apportionments. The Society was again fortunate in persuading Mr. Sandell to undertake the work of abstracting and editing. The abstracts have been made from the certified diocesan copies of the instruments of apportionment, all but six of which are in the custody of the Wiltshire County Council and are housed in the County Record Office at Trowbridge. The Society is grateful for permission to publish the documents to the Wiltshire County Council and, in the cases of Kilmington and of Marston Meysey and Sopworth, to the Somerset County Council and the Gloucester Diocesan Registrar respectively.

Mr. Sandell wishes to thank the Wiltshire County Archivist (Mr. M. G. Rathbone) and his staff for their friendly co-operation while the work of abstracting was proceeding and for their help in solving a number of editorial problems. He is similarly grateful to the staffs of the Somerset Record Office and the former Gloucester City Library.

INTRODUCTION

The practice of paying tithes was based on the notion that tenths should be paid universally to support the local churches and clergy of the early Christian church.<sup>1</sup> The theoretical classification of the tithes into predial tithes, arising from the produce of the land, mixed tithes, from the benefits of the stock, and personal tithes, from the fruits of men's labour, emphasized that no economic activity was exempt from tithe-payment. In theory, and perhaps for a time in practice, churches were held by incumbent rectors who served, and received all the tithes from, a locality which became an ecclesiastical parish. Such parishes were established early in England and the pattern of them was little changed until the 19th century. The paying and receiving of tithes may well have caused dissension at the time when new churches were being founded but subsequent events added new causes for confusion and dissatisfaction. The cure of souls in a parish sometimes passed from the hands of the rector, usually when a monastery appropriated to itself the revenues of the church. When a vicar was nominated to serve the church in the rector's place, the vicarage ordained for him was often endowed with some of the parish tithes. The distinction thus created between rectorial and vicarial tithes usually followed, and so consolidated, the distinction between great tithes, arising from corn, hay, and wool, and small tithes. The great tithes usually remained part of the rectorial estate and the small tithes were usually part of the endowment of the vicarage. After the Dissolution the great tithes often passed through the Crown to laymen and, when not attached to a benefice or an ecclesiastical office, an estate consisting of tithes could be broken up and disposed of in the same way as one consisting of land. To avoid payment in kind tithes were sometimes leased to the owner or tenant of the land from which they arose or, especially in the case of small tithes, were replaced by annual payments which frequently became fixed by custom.<sup>2</sup> The possible existence within a parish of several tithe-owners, perhaps but not necessarily landowners, and of owners with rights to different kinds of tithes, and the availability of several methods of payment could both be sources of confusion and dispute. The introduction of new crops, new techniques of husbandry, and changes in land use might all make it more difficult to agree over what tithes were due to whom and how they were to be valued and paid.<sup>1</sup>

TITHE COMMUTATION IN WILTSHIRE BEFORE 1836

In the early 19th century the ownership of tithes and the encumbrance of land with them in Wiltshire was perhaps typical of such things elsewhere.<sup>2</sup> In some 80 of the ancient ecclesiastical parishes in the county all or virtually all the great and small tithes from the whole parish were due to the incumbent. Those parishes, as might be expected, tended to be the smaller ones with incumbent rectors. The pattern of ownership and encumbrance in them was, in view of the potential complications, notably simple and close to the earliest notions of tithe payment. In parishes in which all great tithes were due to one owner and all small tithes to another, usually a vicar, and in parishes where the incumbent received the great majority of the tithes the pattern was not much more complex. In many other parishes, however, the pattern was confused because over the years tithes had been extinguished, when the right to receive them was permanently surrendered, commuted, when payment in kind was permanently replaced by payment in another way, usually in cash, and merged, when the owner of the tithes also owned the land from which they arose.

On much land tithes had been and were being extinguished and commuted at inclosure. For only some sixteen ancient ecclesiastical parishes had Inclosure Agreements and Awards removed the need for rent-charges to be allotted under the Tithe Commutation Act of 1836.<sup>3</sup> The tithes were usually extinguished by allotments of land but at Chilton Foliat, in addition to an allotment of land and a cash payment to extinguish some tithes, a rent-charge of over £900 was allotted, and at Stratton St. Margaret a corn-rent, an annual cash rent variable according to the prices of grains, was allotted. Corn-rents also replaced tithes under Inclosure Awards on the entire parishes of Colerne and Netheravon but those corn-rents, like that on part of Keevil, were commuted to rent-charges under the Tithe Commutation Act (79, 156, 196). Tithes were dealt with at inclosure more often than those figures suggest, however, since they were extinguished or commuted by awards in some 35 more ancient ecclesiastical parishes. In some 30 lands were exonerated under awards dealing with less than a whole parish, usually with a chapelry or tithing (e.g. Melksham, 190, Durnford, 107), but with everything but the windmill in Tilshhead (252) and with only 23 a. in Upton Scudamore (260). In about five parishes only some of the tithes were extinguished.<sup>1</sup> The tithes were usually replaced by allotments of land but sometimes by annual cash payments or corn-rents (68-9). Apart from the 51 parishes with lands exonerated from all or some tithes at inclosure there were some 80 others with areas of land acknowledged to be tithe-free, although in some seven cases (e.g. 57, 59) only the glebe was deemed tithe-free.<sup>2</sup> Sometimes freedom arose because the ownership of land and tithes had been merged early. The appropriation of the church by a religious house holding land in the parish, which often led to the early exemption of the demesne from tithes, was sometimes said (e.g. 34, 183) or may be inferred (e.g. 268) to be the reason why the land was tithe-free. In some cases the tithe-free areas may have been commonable woodland once within the bounds of no parish, perhaps tithe-free because no tithe had ever been paid (e.g. 267). Elsewhere the reasons for the freedom are uncertain. Some of the 80 parishes with tithe-free land were among about 40 parishes in which tithes were merged under the Tithe Commutation Act or were said to have been already merged. When land and the tithes arising from it were in the same ownership it was usually because appropriated great tithes had passed to laymen after the Dissolution and were sold to the owners of the estates from which they arose. Such land was not deemed tithe-free. The land and tithes remained separate estates capable of separate valuation and disposal but, by the early 19th century, many of the lands involved had to all intents and purposes long been tithe-free. For example, the tithes on virtually the whole of Lyneham (181), most of which had belonged to Bradenstoke Priory,<sup>3</sup> were already merged. Commutation of tithes to moduses or fixed annual payments, usually in cash but sometimes in kind, was mentioned in some 63 parishes, in many of which tithes had also been commuted or extinguished in other ways. Such payments were possibly related to the value of the tithes they replaced at the time of commutation but remained fixed by custom even though the money value of the tithes changed. By the early 19th century they gave a considerable advantage to the tithe-payer. Sometimes the great tithes (e.g. 37, 58) but more often the small tithes were thus commuted. There was a great variety of payments but the most common moduses were small cash payments to cover small tithes.<sup>4</sup> The detail in the list of them for Sherston Magna (232) indicates the potential complications of tithe-paying and the possible confusion and difficulty in the collection even of moduses and customary payments.

Tithe extinguishing, merging, and commuting had in all those ways proceeded to a different extent in different parishes. There remained some 110 ancient ecclesiastical parishes in which no extinguishing, merging, or commuting was recorded and some fourteen more in which they concerned only the glebe land of the benefice. In many of them commutation by leases and temporary agreements certainly took place and, although no detailed account of how tithes were rendered can yet be given, it seems that in all parishes where tithes were not entirely extinguished payment in kind was less common than cash payments by farmers under leases.<sup>1</sup>

THE TITHE COMMUTATION ACT, 1836

The Tithe Commutation Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 71), in no way interfered with the rights of tithe-owners to receive and the obligations of landowners to pay tithes, nor with the differing burdens of tithes with which lands might be encumbered, but, by abolishing nearly all payment in kind and providing for an approved valuation of the tithes arising from all lands, annually and officially adjusted, was intended to put an end to the confusion and dissension attending the payment and receipt of the tithes. Under the Act a rent-charge in place of tithes was assessed for every parish in which tithes had not already been statutorily extinguished or commuted to a corn-rent. The respective numbers of bushels of wheat, barley, and oats which each third of that sum could have bought immediately after the Act was passed were calculated. Thereafter rent-charges equal to the value of those numbers of bushels, at the prices officially announced every January based on the average prices in the seven preceding years, were to be paid annually in place of tithes. The initial rent-charge for each parish was to be agreed between the owners of at least two-thirds by value of the land and of the great and small tithes at meetings which could be called by the owners of a quarter by value of the tithes or of the land subject to tithes. Three commissioners were appointed, two by a Secretary of State, the other by the archbishop of Canterbury, with a staff of not more than twelve assistant commissioners, to confirm such agreements, which bound the whole parish concerned. When tithes were attached to a benefice or to an ecclesiastical office the agreement required the patron's consent and the bishop had to be notified of it. The Act, however, established no rules for the calculation of the initial rent-charges and that may have been at least partly responsible for the frequent failure to reach agreement. Where an agreement had not been reached and was not pending by 1 October 1838 the commissioners themselves awarded the rent-charge. It was set at the clear average annual value of the tithes for the seven years ending at Christmas 1835.<sup>2</sup> Rents paid under leases of tithes and moduses and other customary payments made in place of tithes were taken to be the value of the tithes. The document recording the agreement or award included statements of what area of land in the parish was subject to tithes and how much of it was under what state of cultivation, what moduses and other customary payments were in force, what areas of land were tithe-free, and the rent-charges payable to each tithe-owner. It was dated and then dated again when confirmed by the commissioners.

Once the agreement or award was confirmed a valuer (or an even number of valuers, with provision for an umpire, if a single valuer could not be agreed on) was appointed to apportion the total rent-charge on the parish lands subject to tithes. The burden of rent-charge was to reflect the burden of tithes with which lands were encumbered. Tithe-free lands were exempt, rent-charges did not have to be allotted to tithe-owners who also owned the land from which the tithes arose,<sup>1</sup> and moduses became rent-charges of the same value.<sup>2</sup> The valuer drafted an apportionment. It included a preamble setting out the agreement or award on which it was founded and a schedule listing the names, areas, states of cultivation,<sup>3</sup> and owners and occupiers of the lands on which charges were apportioned. A map or plan was made and referred to by numbers from the schedule in the apportionment. The draft apportionment and map were sent to the commissioners. They had an instrument of apportionment engrossed and the map annexed to it, confirmed and dated it, and sent a copy both to the parish and the appropriate diocesan registry. Lands were discharged from payment of tithes from 1 January after the apportionment was confirmed and the rent-charges became payable from 1 July after that.<sup>4</sup>

The apportionments remained among the records of the Tithe Commissioners (from 1936 the Tithe Redemption Commissioners) and were transferred to the Public Record Office in 1966. The copies of Wiltshire apportionments deposited in the Salisbury and Bristol diocesan registries were transferred by order of the Master of the Rolls to the Wiltshire Record Office from 1950. The copies of the Marston Meysey and Sopworth apportionments have been deposited in the Gloucester Diocesan Record Office in Gloucester City Library and that of the Kilmington apportionment in the Somerset Record Office. The abstracts printed below were made from the diocesan copies.<sup>5</sup>

THE PROGRESS OF TITHE COMMUTATION UNDER THE ACT

There were some 255 ancient ecclesiastical parishes in Wiltshire for which commutation was necessary under the Tithe Commutation Act, but the Act provided that the ancient ecclesiastical parish need not be the area for which agreements, awards, and apportionments were made. The Tithe Commissioners could order an extra-parochial place, a township in which separate overseers of the poor were appointed, or any other place constituting a tithe-paying unit to be treated as an independent tithe district for the purposes of commutation.<sup>1</sup> The abstracts of the 290 Wiltshire apportionments printed below therefore include eight for extra-parochial places and some 30 for chapelries or tithings, including three for the mother parishes of which there was no award (9, 209, 287). Many more than 30 of the ancient ecclesiastical parishes in Wiltshire, however, contained chapelries or tithings, usually based on pre-Conquest villages, with their own common fields and, where they had them, with churches which remained daughter churches. Such parishes were dealt with in a variety of ways under the Tithe Commutation Act and, although the making of binding decisions by majorities in a tithe district may have made the choice of what the district was to be a delicate matter, it is difficult to trace a consistent principle in the way they were treated. Chapelries, tithings, and townships from some 21 ancient ecclesiastical parishes were made official tithe districts. Some large parishes like Enford (114-18) and Bishop's Cannings (52-5) were divided into several tithe districts and some 35 'non-parochial' tithe districts were thus formed. Individually a good case could be made for each one to become a tithe district. In some the tithe owners were different from those of the mother parish (e.g. Allington, in All Cannings, 51). Others became tithe districts because they were clearly already parishes for poor-law purposes (e.g. Stert, in Urchfont, 241, East Grimstead, in West Dean, 132), perhaps with very little connexion with the mother parish (e.g. West Knoyle, in North Newton, 163), although they may not have had different tithe-owners (e.g. the two Wilsfords and their tithings, 269-72). All those places clearly became tithe districts for good reasons but many other places apparently with equally good claims were dealt with as part of their parent parishes. In twenty parish apportionments the owners and occupiers of more than one township, tithing, or chapelry can be distinguished in the schedules. In each of them a single agreement or award dealt with the whole parish. In three apportionments founded on agreements, however, the total rent-charges and the land-use figures for the several parts of the parish were specified separately in the preamble reciting the agreement, perhaps suggesting an amalgamation of separate agreements (All Cannings, 50, Downton, 104, Melksham, 190). In the other seventeen parishes a single agreement or award was made and the constituent townships, tithings, or chapelries were distinguished only in the schedules to the apportionments; elsewhere (e.g. Wilcot, 268) not even that was done. Why were some places not treated as tithe districts when they were certainly already parishes for poor-law purposes (e.g. Brokenborough, Charlton, and Westport St. Mary, 41)? The most likely reason seems to have been that the tithes belonged principally to a single owner (41, 50, 104), although that did not prevent other parishes being split into tithe districts. It seems that there was no consistent principle and that the arrangement which appeared locally to be most convenient and likely to lead to agreement was adopted.

Of the 290 apportionments for parishes and tithe districts abstracted below, 178 were founded on agreements. The dates of the agreements, that is the dates when the first signatures were put to them, run from 15 November 1836 (214), only three months after the Act was passed, to 18 April 1844 (239), 5½ years after the statutory date for reaching agreements. In a few places agreements had been signed by that statutory date, 1 October 1838, and a great many were evidently pending then, to judge by the number signed 1839–40, the busiest years for agreements. If no agreement had been signed by the end of 1840 commutation was more likely to have been by award than agreement, but agreements continued to be reached and did not become unusual until after 1841. Success or failure in reaching an agreement was apparently unrelated to the size of the place or the complexity of the pattern of land- and tithe-ownership in it. Agreements were indeed reached in most of Wiltshire's larger and more complex parishes. At both Trowbridge and Melksham (190, 256), for example, agreements were reached in 1836, although both had to be amended by supplementary agreements. On the other hand there might be no agreement despite a simple pattern of ownership (e.g. 224). The fact that in three-fifths of the places tithes were commuted under agreements, despite the potential difficulties in valuing them, perhaps confirms that commutation was desired on both sides.

The first Wiltshire award was made by the commissioners on 4 December 1838 (102), only two months after the date on which awards became possible. The last was made on 23 May 1850 (64), but most were made in the period 1840–5. The commissioners had clear rules for estimating the value of the tithes, but they were not bound by them and the preamble in the apportionment recording the award often refers to the fact that the annual value of the tithes in the seven years ending at Christmas 1835 was not a proper basis for a permanent commutation. The Wiltshire awards and supplementary awards were the work of only five assistant commissioners, three of whom acted on only one occasion each. Some 112 awards, including thirteen supplementary awards following agreements, were the work of Aneurin Owen (d. 1851), all but two over the years 1838–47. Since assistant commissioners could also be asked to advise on the terms of agreements and bore responsibility for the vetting of agreements and of apportionments under agreements and awards, they were clearly very busy years for Owen, whose work as an assistant tithe commissioner was presumably not confined to Wiltshire.<sup>1</sup> Although his task was to value the tithes, not to survey the land or apportion the rent-charge, the pressure on his time may have limited Owen's personal understanding of the history of tithe-paying and of the dispute attending it in each place. George Wingrove Cooke was responsible for eleven awards between 1846 and 1850, nine of them made in 1848.<sup>2</sup> Supplementary agreements followed eight agreements, and supplementary awards followed fifteen agreements and seventeen awards. They usually resulted from an omission in the draft agreement or award but sometimes corrected a mistaken calculation or altered the rent-charge. They were usually nearer the date on which the apportionment was confirmed than the date of agreement or award and so were presumably found necessary during apportionment or examination of the draft apportionment by the commissioners. The awards for Netheravon, Keevil, and Colerne (196, 156, 79) to convert corn-rents, payable under Inclosure Awards, to rent-charges were made by the Tithe Commissioners respectively in 1863, 1864, and 1875. Altered apportionments are not noticed in the abstracts printed below.

After an award or agreement had been made it was usually possible to agree on a single valuer to apportion the rent-charge. Of some 87 valuers<sup>1</sup> employed about half were drawn from outside the county. Local men, however, were more frequently used. Francis Attwood of Salisbury and Robert Davis Little of Chippenham, for example, were valuers in 33 and 30 apportionments respectively. As the Act demanded, the schedules to the apportionments record the area of every piece of land, however small, subject to tithes. Especially in the larger parishes much surveying and valuing and then apportioning was necessary.<sup>2</sup> The Act required draft apportionments to be completed six months after the agreement or award was confirmed but that hardly seems to have been possible in some large parishes. Surveying and valuation expenses were paid by the tithe-owners and landowners but they were mentioned in the apportionments of only Highworth (142) and Lydiard Millicent (179). The more active valuers presumably profited greatly from their fees especially if, as in the case of Richard Stratton of Upavon, they were themselves farmers of substance. The maps accompanying the draft apportionments are not all dated, nor their makers all known.<sup>3</sup> To judge from those which do bear dates they were made, as might be expected, during the process of apportionment, but that was not always so. In several cases (e.g. 9, 21, 197) the map preceded the agreement or award; elsewhere (e.g. 265) it seems to have been made at a much later stage. Some 35 mapmakers are known, a few of them also being valuers.<sup>4</sup> About a third came from outside the county.

The interval between the agreement or award and the confirmation and engrossment of the apportionment varied greatly. The average was probably about two years. The interval was infrequently shorter than a year but rarely exceeded five years. The rate of progress towards apportionment and confirmation can, allowing for some exceptions, be related roughly to the size and complexity of the parish concerned. In Alton Barnes (6), a parish of c. 1,000 a. in which all the tithes belonged to a rector whose patrons owned nearly all the land, the interval was six months, but in Milton Lilbourne (194), a parish of nearly 3,500 a. with several townships and tithings and several tithe-owners and landowners, it was three years. By 1846, however, ten years after the Tithe Commutation Act, most tithes were commuted in Wiltshire, and by 1856 they all were.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE ABSTRACTS

The collection which follows has been confined to the modern boundary of Wiltshire. It is founded on the principle that for each apportionment there should be a single and separate abstract. The abstracts for ancient ecclesiastical parishes and extra-parochial places which became tithe districts are arranged lexicographically. Those for chapelries, tithings, or townships which became tithe districts appear as separate numbered abstracts under the name of the mother parish with the name of the tithe district printed below the title line. A few such districts appear under their own names.

The area of the parish or district subject to tithes, taken from the recital of the agreement or award in the preamble, is printed against the right-hand margin in the title-line of nearly every abstract. The areas often correspond roughly to the totals given of lands under different types of cultivation, but many of the figures are unreliable. Some seem to include tithe-free land (e.g. 268) and, when a whole parish was subject to tithes, it is often doubtful whether the figure expressing the area represents an estimated total area or whether non-tithable parts of the parish, such as the roads, were excluded. In the award for Wilsford in Swanborough hundred, for example, the roads were apparently excluded, but in the agreement for Manningford Bohune, its tithing, were apparently included (269-70). A sub-title, Agreement or Award, indicates whether the apportionment was founded on agreement or award. It is followed by the date of the agreement or award, with the name of the assistant commissioner for an award in brackets. That is followed by the date when the apportionment was confirmed and sealed by the commissioners, taken from the back of the document. The assistant commissioners dealing with awards are listed in Appendix 3. The statement of the total rent-charges agreed or awarded and the tithe-owners to whom they were allotted is abstracted under the sub-title Tithe rent-charge. The abstract records, when the information is given in the preamble, the nature of the tithes replaced by the rent-charges and the areas of land from which they arose. It also records, where possible, what tithes had been covered by moduses or similar payments, what tithes had already been merged or were merged under the agreement or award, what land was tithe-free (sometimes including a reason for the freedom), and what land had been exonerated from tithes under an Inclosure Award. The figures expressing the uses to which the tithable lands of the parish were put are also abstracted from the preamble. Under Arable, upland or commonable arable is sometimes distinguished. Meadow is not used in the precise sense of grassland from which a crop was taken for hay, but usually means all land under grass, often including down land. Pasture, from which no crop of grass was taken for hay, is sometimes separated from the meadow. It often includes upland sheep pasture but sometimes the area of Down is itself given separately. The area of land taken by Homesteads is frequently given and other uses of land are sometimes specified.

The total numbers of Owners and the names of owners and Occupiers are abstracted from the schedules to the apportionments. Limitation of space has prevented the naming of those holding a total of less than 50 a. of land. The schedules sometimes reveal a tenorial chain with several links between the holders in fee of the land and the men who cultivated it. The owners named in the abstracts are those named in the apportionments at the top of the chain. The occupiers named are those holding immediately of them. To avoid excessive complication and to save space lower tenants are not noticed in the abstracts. A further warning must be given. It is certain that the owners named in some apportionments (e.g. 6, 51, where the owners are known from other sources and named in square brackets) were themselves tenants although that fact could not possibly be discovered from the apportionment. It is not clear how often the apportionments play such tricks but it is certainly advisable for the reader concerned with the ownership and farming of the land to use the abstracts, and the apportionments themselves, cautiously. Glebe estates, however small, are mentioned under Owners whether they were attached to a benefice or not. When an apportionment identifies land, belonging to a lay rector or any other owner, which was formerly glebe to support a rector, that information appears in the abstract. The valuers are not named in the abstracts but are listed in Appendix 1.

From the maps only the date, where given, and the scale have been abstracted. For maps which have no scale on them an approximate scale has usually been given in square brackets. The names of known mapmakers are listed in Appendix 2.

In the abstracts the spellings of place-names, including the names of some farms, have been rationalized in accordance with modern usage and some personal names, especially of peers and baronets, have been standardized. Many of the lesser place-names and most personal names have been left in the form that they take in the apportionments. Parts of acres are adjusted to the nearest whole acre; areas smaller than one acre are increased to an acre.

INDEX

Places named only as being excluded (e.g. Pitton in no. 2) and minor local place-names are not included in the index. Subheadings are given under place-names only where the references for the subheadings differ from those for the main name and cross-reference is made from a parish to a hamlet only when there are references for the hamlet not given for the parish. The county in which a place outside Wiltshire lies is given after the name where it appears in its alphabetical position, and not elsewhere.

Under a surname, all the references to the same forename have been grouped together, except that references to the name modified in the abstracts by the addition of an address, office, etc., or by seniority have been separately indexed. Therefore it does not follow that all the references grouped after a name are to a single person, or that all the references to one man are in a single group. The title 'Rev.' is omitted in the names of clerical incumbents; lay rectors are not indexed as such. Peers are indexed under their surnames, whether or not the surnames are given in the abstracts.

Except for those preceded by 'p.' references are to entry-numbers, not page-numbers. The index does not indicate when a name occurs more than once in an abstract.
