PREFACE

This volume was originally undertaken by Miss Elizabeth Crittall, but she unfortunately found herself unable to proceed, whereupon I took over the work of editing.

Mr C.R. Elrington, the President of the Society, not only allowed me to quote much of his own Introduction to volume XXIX in the Society's series, but also read my Introduction and made a number of valuable suggestions. To members of the Society's Committee and of the staff of the Wiltshire Victoria County History I owe a number of suggestions for the identification of place-names. To my friends at the Public Record Office I owe more than they realise.

A forename set in italic type indicates the person whose heirs or inheritance are specified when it would not otherwise be clear from the abstract. A part of a place-name set in italic type shows that the part has been translated from Latin. See below p. xiii.

INTRODUCTION

This volume is a continuation of the Abstracts of Feet of Fines relating to Wiltshire in the reigns of Edward I and Edward II, edited by R.B. Pugh, and the Abstracts . . . for the reign of Edward III, edited by C.R. Elrington, volumes I and XXIX in this Record Series, and it follows very closely the pattern set by the latter volume.

Feet of Fines, records of the Court of Common Pleas, are preserved in the Public Record Office. Those of earlier date than 1509 are known as Series I, and have the class number CP 25(1). They are arranged county by county in files which are grouped in cases. The fines for Wiltshire for the years 1377–1509 are in cases 256 and 257 and the files are numbered 54 to 66. All these fines have been abstracted in this volume. In addition there are files relating to more than one county, known as divers counties files. These for the same period are contained in cases 289 to 294, files 52 to 83. All fines relating partly to Wiltshire have also been abstracted here. The reference given at the end of each entry in this volume gives the number of the case, the number of the file and the number within the file. Preceded by the class number, CP 25(1), they form a complete reference to each fine.

Since there was little if any difference between the form and content of the fines of the reign of Edward III and those of the fifteenth century it is not necessary to repeat the description given in the introduction to the volume by C.R. Elrington. With only slight modification it may be taken to serve as the introduction to this volume also. In physical form the only difference was that the feet of fines tended to become larger. That was especially the case with 'divers counties' fines which very often dealt with extensive holdings in several counties, occasionally comprising nearly half the counties of England. Most of the documents are in good condition, but in a few places words have become illegible or been torn off.

Until 1489 the only notable change from the fines of Edward III's reign was the introduction of warranties against one specific person. Until at least 1422 the warranty was always 'against all men'. From early in the reign of Henry VI warranties against individuals began to appear. The persons were invariably the named heads of religious houses and their successors. Most commonly the abbot of Westminster was named, probably because being a close neighbour of the courts of law he was well known to the court if not to the parties. Other abbots and priors, however, were sometimes named, usually from Wiltshire or neighbouring counties. The one thing that such heads of houses had in common was that they had no estate in the premises concerned. The warranty was a fiction, perhaps intended to limit the liability of the grantor by excluding any unexpressed but implied warranty deriving from the conveyance.

Another change was introduced in 1489. The first Statute of Fines (4 Henry VII, c. 24) strengthened the title of the conusee to the premises conveyed to him by barring the claims of other persons provided that proclamations of the fine were made in open court, and provided that they did not claim within five years of the proclamations. Four proclamations had to be made in the term in which the fine was levied, and four in each of the three following terms. Proclamations came to take up a lot of the court's time, but the only effect on surviving feet of fines was that a number are endorsed with the dates of the sixteen proclamations. Because they add nothing to the information given by the fines no indication of such endorsements has been given in the abstracts.

All the fines in this volume dated before 1494 were, like those of the reign of Edward III, levied on a writ of covenant. Thereafter, in revival of an earlier practice, seven (nos. 735, 738, 743, 751, 755, 771) were levied under plea of warranty of charter. In each of those cases the plaintiff is described as petent' rather than querent' and in the first case only the deforciant is described as tenent'. Otherwise those seven conform in all respects to the normal pattern, and no differences have been shown in the abstracts.

In two instances the extensive lands and tenements covered by the fines were sufficiently important to cause the king to become the plaintiff in his own court. By the first (no. 694) Edward IV secured for himself the reversion of the estates held by his queen, Elizabeth Woodville. By the second (no. 716) Henry VII secured control of the estates (restored by Act of Parliament in the previous year, 1487) of Anne, countess of Warwick, heiress of the last Beauchamp earl and widow of the 'Kingmaker'. These fines like most of the other large ones of the period arose out of the resettlement of property consequent upon the many forfeitures and restorations of the Wars of the Roses. Most noteworthy was the great resettlement of the Daubeney and Beaumont estates (nos. 754-6, 766, 787). Remarkably the clerks who prepared those fines appear to have been uncertain of the counties in which some of the manors and other holdings lay, getting some of the counties wrong, and sometimes covering their uncertainty and ensuring the validity of the fines by listing the same places under more than one county.

It is noticeable that as the fifteenth century advanced detailed lists of premises were frequently attached to the manors, amounting apparently to full extents apart from the capital messuage and demesne, thus restricting the meaning of the word 'manor' to the lord's own holdings.

Authorities

In addition to the introductions to the two previous volumes in this series, mentioned above, the following works are of value for the understanding of fines: the introductions to A Calendar of Feet of Fines relating to the county of Huntingdon, 1194-1603, ed. G.J. Turner, Cambridge Antiquarian Society, 1913, and Abstracts of Surrey Feet of Fines, 1509-58, ed. C.A.F. Meckings, Surrey Record Society, vol. xix, 1946; and F. Pollock and F.W. Maitland, History of English Law, 2nd. edn., vol. ii, pp. 94-106, and S.F.C. Milsom, Historical foundations of the Common Law, 1969, pp. 181-3.

Editorial Method

All the feet of fines relating wholly or partly to Wiltshire in the above-mentioned files have been abstracted. In the files the fines are arranged by regnal years but not in chronological order within the years. Here they have been placed in strict chronological order, divers counties fines being inserted in the appropriate places and double-dated fines according to the dates on which they were granted and recorded. The dates on which they were made have been added in brackets.

Names of Persons. The surnames of all persons, whether parties to the fine or incidentally mentioned, are given as in the original. Forenames are given in the modern form, where there is a generally accepted one. Unusual names are given as in the original. Contractions and suspensions are extended where the intention is clear. Names of places which occur in the titles of peers, the sees of bishops or the houses of abbots and priors are given in the modern form. Descriptions of the status or trade of persons are translated or modernised.

Names of Places. Wherever places have been identified with reasonable certainty the modern form of the place name is given followed by the spelling in brackets as it appears in the original if it is different from the modern form, contractions and suspensions being extended as above. The contemporary form is given only once in each fine, provided that it is the same each time that it occurs. Latin parts of names, normally adjectives such as 'Magnus' or 'Parvus' are translated and given in italics as Great, Little etc. Exceptionally 'Nova Sarum' or abbreviations of the Latin form are always rendered as 'Salisbury'; only where a modern form of the name is given is it shown. Unidentified places are shown in the text in inverted commas. In the index only the modern form of identified places is given. Unidentified and unspecified places are so described.

Parts of the fine are considered as in volume XXIX.

Place. All the fines were made in the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, except for those of the first part of the 16th year of Richard II, when the court was at York (nos. 154-7). The place is therefore omitted except in these four cases.

Date. The return days are given with two days where applicable. The regnal year is given only above the first fine for that year, and the year of grace at the top of each page, and at a change of year.

Justices. The names of justices are omitted.

Parties. Plaintiff and defendant are abbreviated to 'pl.' and 'def.' and the parties are so referred to after their first occurrence in each abstract, the abbreviations being used indiscriminately for singular and plural. The fore-name of one of the parties being set in italic indicates a person, being one of several in a party, whose heirs or inheritance are specified in the fine, when the abstract does not otherwise include this fact. Otherwise the names of parties are given as in the document. After a representative's name the phrase 'for winning or losing' is omitted.

The premises consist mainly of manor, messuages, lands and rents. Carucates and virgates are assumed to be of arable land and the words 'of land' are omitted. Acres (abbreviated as 'a.') of land, normally arable, are given as 'of land'. Meadow, pasture, wood etc. are so translated. The words 'with appurtenances' are omitted from all lists of premises. Names of places are treated as above.

The plea clause is omitted.

The acknowledgement is given in a shortened form.

The form of grant is also shortened, particularly where reversions are granted. There and elsewhere it is to be assumed that where no limitation is expressed, such as tenure for life or in tail, the grant is in fee simple, i.e. that after the name of the grantee come the words 'and his heirs for ever'. (Where the heirs of one out of several persons are specified, the fact is indicated by that person's name being in italic, as mentioned above.)

Habendum clause. The abstract assumes that unless otherwise stated the fine specifies that tenure is from the chief lords of the fee, and by the services which belong to the premises, and for ever; also that where a grantee is to hold from the grantor he is charged with doing the services due from the tenements to the chief lords. The abstracts retain the distinction between 'during the life of . . .' (tota vita predicti . . .), used of grantees, and 'for the term of life' (ad terminum vite), used of life tenants mentioned incidentally. Remainders are specified as successive where more than one person or married couple is actually named; whether or not they are contingent will be clear from the nature of the preceding title.

Warranty clause is indicated by the one word 'Warranty' where it is against 'all persons'. If against one person he is named.

The consideration is indicated in standard form after the abbreviation 'Cons.'.

An attornment is indicated by the phrase 'N. has done fealty'.

Abstracts of fines made by the king's order, for lands and tenements held of the king in chief, are indicated by that phrase.

Feet of Fines already published
